The scarcity of colored teachers throughout the county has led to a suggestion that a special examination be held early in September to fill the many vacancies in the teaching force of the county. If held, both white and colored teachers who want to stand the examination will be given an opportunity. Request was made this week by the County Superintendent for this special examination and it seems likely that said examination will be held early in September. Those who want to take such examination should watch The Falcon for announcement of the date.

Leaders Organize to Improve Livestock

On July 30 leaders in the development of the livestock industry in Tennessee met at Nashville and formed an organization which promises to be of great influence in furthering the livestock interests of the state. The organization will be known as the "Tennessee Livestock Improvement Committee." Dr. M. Jacob, State Veterinarian, was elected chairman; E. E. Miller, editor of the Southern Agriculturist, vice-chairman and M. O. Cooper, secretary of the Tennessee Beef Breeders' Association, secretary.

It was the opinion sensed at the meeting that this committee would meet once a month for the purpose of co-ordinating the ideas and efforts of all the livestock workers and to serve as a clearing house, that co-operation be effected and that duplication of effort be eliminated.

"Too wide a gap exists between the feeders of Tennessee and the purebred breeders of the state," said L. A. Richardson, specialist in animal husbandry of the University of Tennessee. He pointed out that there is a list of 300 purebred beef sires now in the hands of his department which breeders are unable to dispose of. At the same time there are hundreds of herds of cattle headed by scrub sires.

The Division of Extension, Tennessee State Fair Association, State Department of Agriculture, Nashville Union Stock Yards, Tennessee Beef Breeders' Association, the Southern Agriculturist and the farm department of the Nashville papers were represented at this meeting and it was believed that something good will result from the formation of such an organization.
